Finally, after eight years, in which the law has been practically a dead letter, the Supreme Court has decided, as it was evident that it must deside, the law has been practically a dead letter, the Supreme Court has decided, as it was evident that it must decide, that the act was unconstitutional. But while the law has, in one sense, been inoperative, in another it has been of great influence, and that mischievous. It has kept alive a prejudice against the negroes and against the Republican party in the South, which without it would have gradually died out. It has furnished demandled the without it would have gradually died out. It has furnished demanders produced in the colored race, arousing hostility among the Southers whites and rendering the Republican party ridiculous. Unhappily, the decision which kills the law comes too late to remedy the ills which it produced. The principle which it involves is no longer at issue in ustional politics, and can never again be made one. The judgment of the court is but a final she halver in a blaster full. of scribed in the control of the court is but a final she halver in a blaster full. of scribed in the colored state of the court is but a final she halver in a blaster full. of scribed in the colored state of the court is but a final she continental sold up from 45% to 15% per cent decline from Thursthy's closing quotations. cuspter in a history full of wretched blunders, made possible by the sincerest and noblest sentiment of humanity, but in which the cutuning and conscienceless schemers of the Butler school have played the larger part.

This is about as strong language as ould be used, and yet the Tribune is not behind the Times in its approval of the ruling of the Court. It says:

"Various leaders of the colored people continue to show indignation over the Civil Risks."

ple continue to show indignation over the Civil Rights decision, which seems exagerated when it is remembered that the law was practically a dead to the Bishops declared that if the uegroes' rights were to be thus trampled upon, there would be a 'revolution. Talk of this kind is certainly ill advised, and it is a pleasure to see that some colored leaders are more sensible. The Rev. Mr. Laws, a Washington elergyman, who was a delegate to the Louisville Convention, says the Civil Rights law was a useless one, and never did any one any good. He is satisfied with the rights the race have under the Constitution, without any additional class legislation in their favor. The colored people should remember that the Suprems Court has simply done its duty in declaring the law as it finds it. The Court could not have done other wise than say the law was unconstitutionally and it is foolish to demonstrate for confessed as to him and est for foressed as to him and est for first foreign for foressed as to him and est for foressed as to him and est for foressed as to him and est for forest foreign for forest foreign for foreign foreign foreign foreign foreign fo

The Court could not have done other wise than say the law was unconstitutional, and it is foolish to denounce the decision as it it involved some moral wrong or political treachery. The best friends of the race will tell them that they are better off without any law, but if they are satisfied they must have one, their best plan is, instead of abusing the Supreme Court, to induce Congress and the State Legislatures to take the subject up. It dobs not seem likely that Congress will pass any now ovill rights law, though its right to make one affecting only inter-State Commerce, under the Commerce clause of the Constitution; will probably be conceded. No doubt the States could also pass such laws governing commerce within their borders, but experience has shown how easy it is for the States also to get beyond their jurisdiction.
